

I am strongly against relaxing the regulations of broadcast ownership. Current broadcasting seems largely aimed at placating and brainwashing the public, rather than informing them. History and recent events have also shown us that those with power always want more. I have little faith in the integrity of those with financial power. They would have a feifdom, not a democracy, and the loss of others citizens is of no consequence to them.

The existence of our constitution requires a public that is informed, and wise in its decision making. And we all understand what powerful disseminators of information and influence television and radio are. Reducing regulations, that are intended to keep anyone or any group from gaining major control of the airwaves, would be a travesty to our nation and the theory of democracy. It could be considered a terrorist assault on America. It terrifies me as "Big Brother" conspires to take away our rights to think freely.

This is no small change you are considering making. You must consider the health of our nation as it applies to those people who take the constitution seriously, who are intelligent and hard working citizens - the heart of this nation.
